

New Year Wishes

Dear friends

21 December 2012 was over. There was no planet collision or pole shift. We enjoyed a peaceful doomsday.

According to Mayan calendar, 22 December 2012 marks the beginning of another cycle of 394 years. Why not we celebrate the new era and our continued existence with an epic video production featuring the stunning mountains and landscapes that nature offers!

Planet Earth: <https://www.youtube.com/embed/6v2L2UGZJAM?rel=0>

Compared with the immense power of nature, human is minute. While conserving this captivating planet is our must-do, believe that the limited human wisdom can somehow conquer the laws of nature which have been operating for the past 4.6 billion years is just a wishful thinking.

As expounded by James Hutton, the father of modern geology in the uniformitarianism theory that “the present is the key to the past”, rocks and landforms are the excellent record of our planet earth history. At the start of the new era, let’s work together for geoconservation, enabling our next generations to admire our amazing earth as well as to understand how geological processes shape its beauty. We wish the policymakers could make use of the geologic expertise to formulate policies for a better living environment.

Wish you all the best!

Association for Geoconservation, Hong Kong

25-12-2012